Man Power

No longer are coiffed fauxhawks or skinny jeans the only signs that a man is a fashionable breed apart. Style now—as our Men of Style clearly show—is about Southern sophistication and a little something more. Here, our picks for the best dressed men in Atlanta, in their own dapper duds.

the whole no-socks thing," says Mashburn, "the Italians got that from the Southerners. We wanted that easy style." The Westside men's boutique owner should know: He's from the delta country. "I'm from Brandon, Miss. Our town had 1,500 people and one red light." But a small town upbringing didn't stop an 18-year-old Sid from getting interested in fashion and moving to Manhattan after graduating from Ole Miss. "Dressing up mentally changes you," says Mashburn. "People dress down too much. I see a guy at church with cargo shorts, and I'm like, 'C'mon, man. Don't play to the rest commonominator.'" As a father of five girls, men's clothes are important to Mashburn. That's why I have a men's store," he says. "I'm surrounded by too much estrogen."
